Painting Boats

Sausalito is teeming with boats. Numerous sailboats dot the Bay on sunny weekends. Marinas lining Sausalito's long waterfront are crammed with boats in all shapes and sizes, from a wooden tug, to a yacht named "Why Walk."

During the Gold Rush, ships would stop in Sausalito to take on fresh spring water and beef from local ranches. Somewhat smaller boats were used to dip under the watchful eye of the lawmen during Prohibition. During World War Two, many a bottle was broken over the bows of the Liberty Ships built and launched in Sausalito.

Many Sausalitans live in houseboat communities populating long piers with glorious views on all sides. Houseboat architecture ranges from the ramshackle to the palatial – with everything in between. Victorian era “arc houses” also sit on the dock of the Bay.

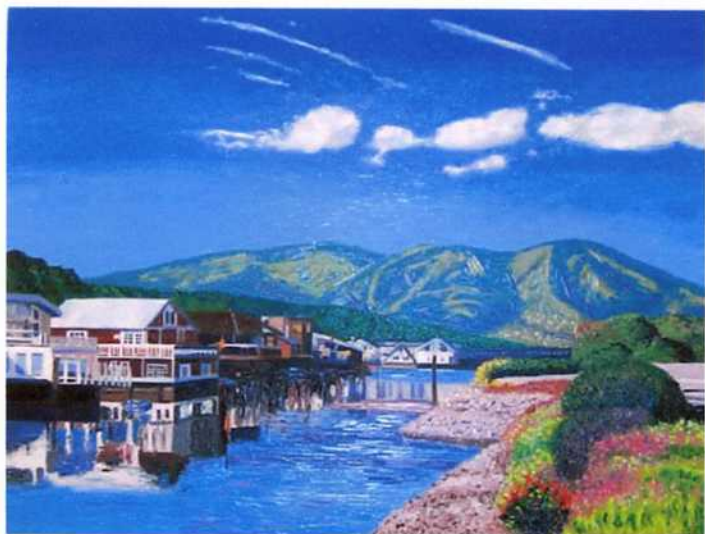

Water and skies are two of my favorite subjects and boats are the perfect focus to paint both. Boats are often stunningly mirrored by reflections in calm water and light by the water is ever-changing. Reflections create mood and movement.

Fishing boats gather along Sausalito's seawall in the winter, along with flocks of competing birds and feasting sea lions. Ferries move back and forth between Sausalito and San Francisco, bringing waves of commuters and tourists. Kayaks paddle in the still morning and evening hours and historic schooners reenact cannon battles under the Golden Gate

With any purchase in 2005, you will be entered into a drawing to win a framed Golden Gate Bridge print —a $245 value. Drawing held on Dec. 4th. Winner notified by Dec. 15th.
